PROLOGUE

For many reasons Classical High School is unique. In a rather obvious sense, Classical is set apart from the ordinary high school by its four-year course and by its completely college-preparatory curriculum. Beneath these surface differences, however, lies the most important facet of the school's individuality, the Classical spirit.

This spirit is the product of Classical's general excellence, tradition, and atmosphere. But, these forces would not have had the same effect if the setting had been different. The Classical spirit owes a large measure of its existence to the yellow building on Pond Street.

Darkness recedes before the advancing rays of the morning sun, and the glow of dawn illuminates the yellow-brick building on Weybosset Hill. Light begins to spread through the grimy windows, revealing a silent room, full of inscribed desks and battered chairs.

Except for a physics homework assignment, the blackboard is empty, but the ancient bookcase, resting precariously on its wobbly legs, is full of tattered volumes. The books, like the seventy-year-old building, are durable. They have survived two fires and twenty generations of students and have remained to stimulate the minds of the future occupants of Classical. The books, the blackboard, the desks, and the whole building await the forthcoming school day, just as they have waited for so many years.

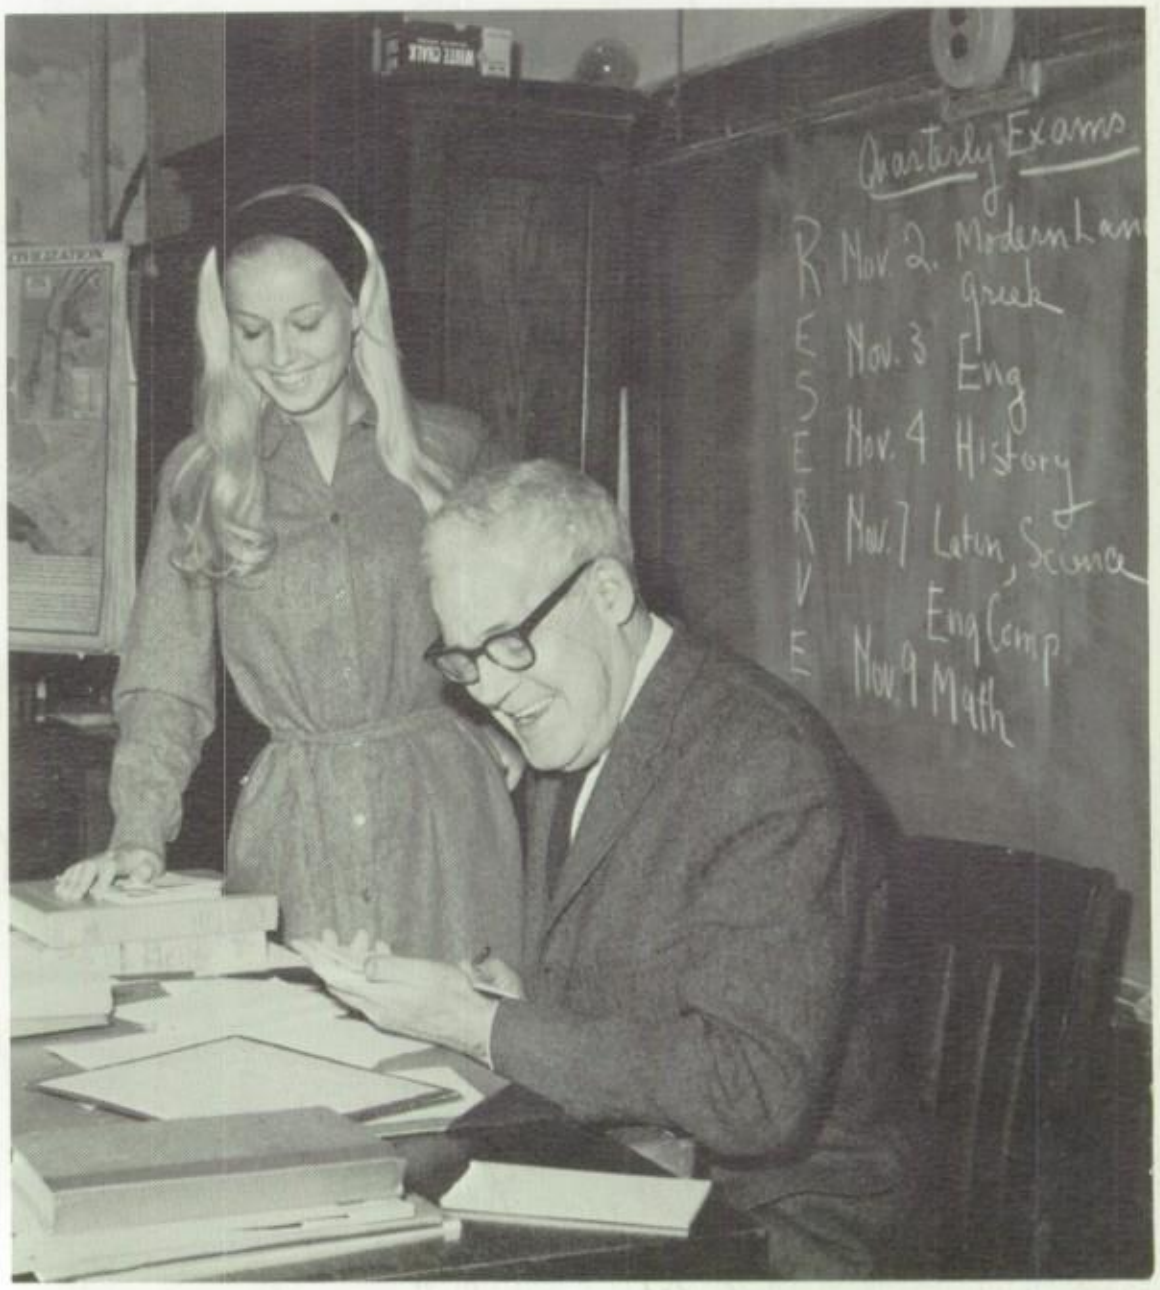
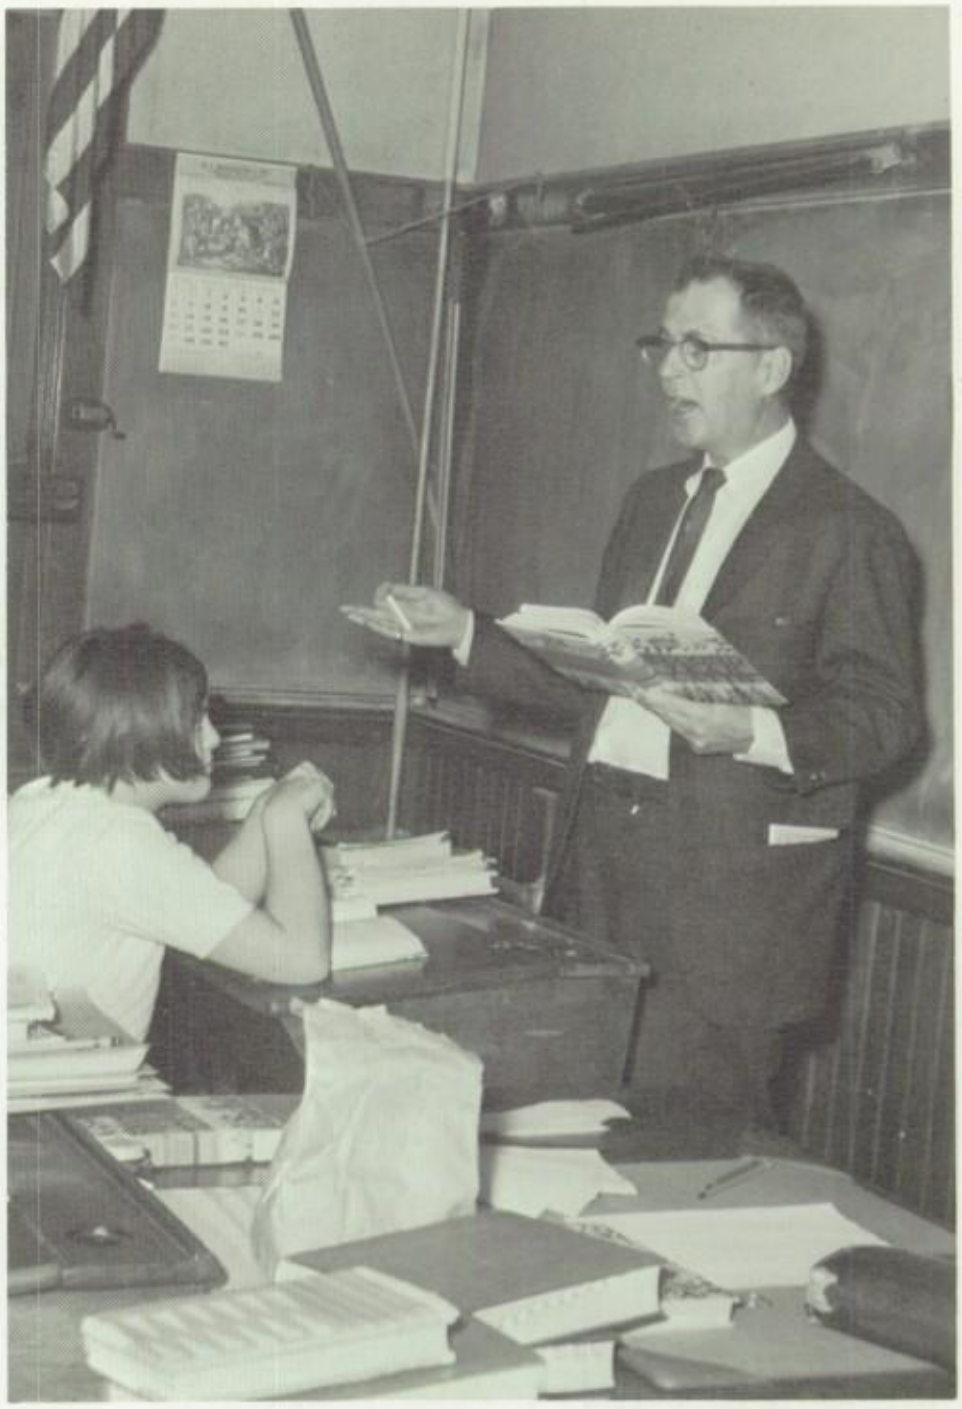
Since 1897, every day has brought changes to the building on Pond Street. When Classical was built, it contained twelve large classrooms and twelve recitation rooms. As the number of students increased, and the curriculum grew, rooms for chemistry, biology, and physics were added to the third floor. Still the school expanded; the recitation rooms became classrooms. Finally, to combat the problem of overcrowding, Rooms 8 and 23 have taken the place of the boys' locker rooms, and the lockers have been scattered along the school corridors.

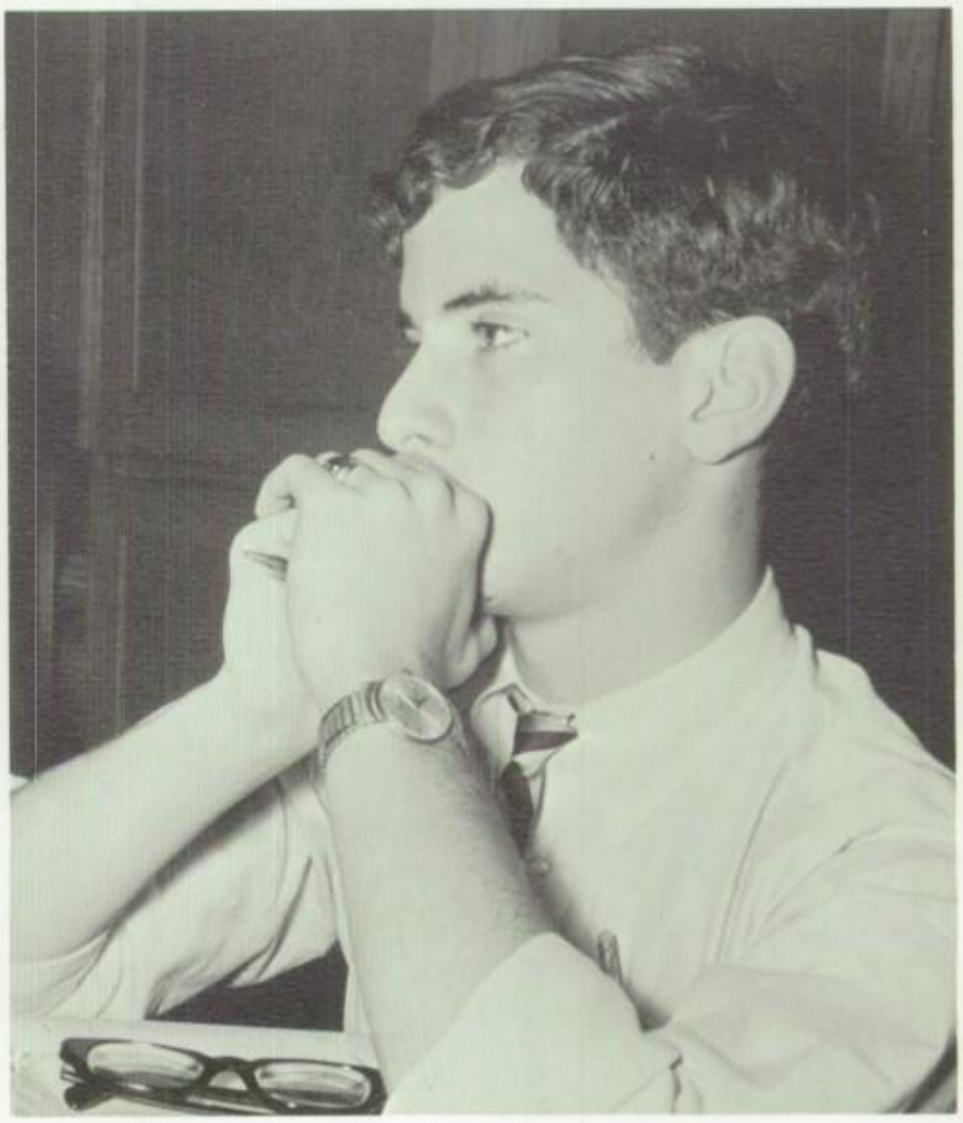
The students, however, have never changed. For seventy years they have maintained the standards of excellence for which Classical is noted. Every class has questioned, debated, and absorbed the abstract ideas that are called "knowledge." But, now, the building is wrapped in silence.



Suddenly, the stillness is broken; from deep inside the building a voice echoes through the hall. The first students have arrived. One by one, and then in a stream, they escape from the harsh winds into the school. They congregate in the corridors, the study hall, the cafeterias. Gradually, homerooms fill with students of many different backgrounds, each drawn to the same school for a different reason.

With the start of first period classes, the most important part of the school day begins. The sounds of several voices mingle in the hall as teachers explain their lessons: in one room is a recitation of Moliére, in another, a repetition of Catullus, and in another, a resurrection of Eliot. A murmur escapes from several classrooms and thickens unintelligibly. In the midst of the hum, a messenger darts toward a closed door. Finally, the period is over. The students clutch awkward mounds of books and drift into the mainstream of Classical life, the school corridor.



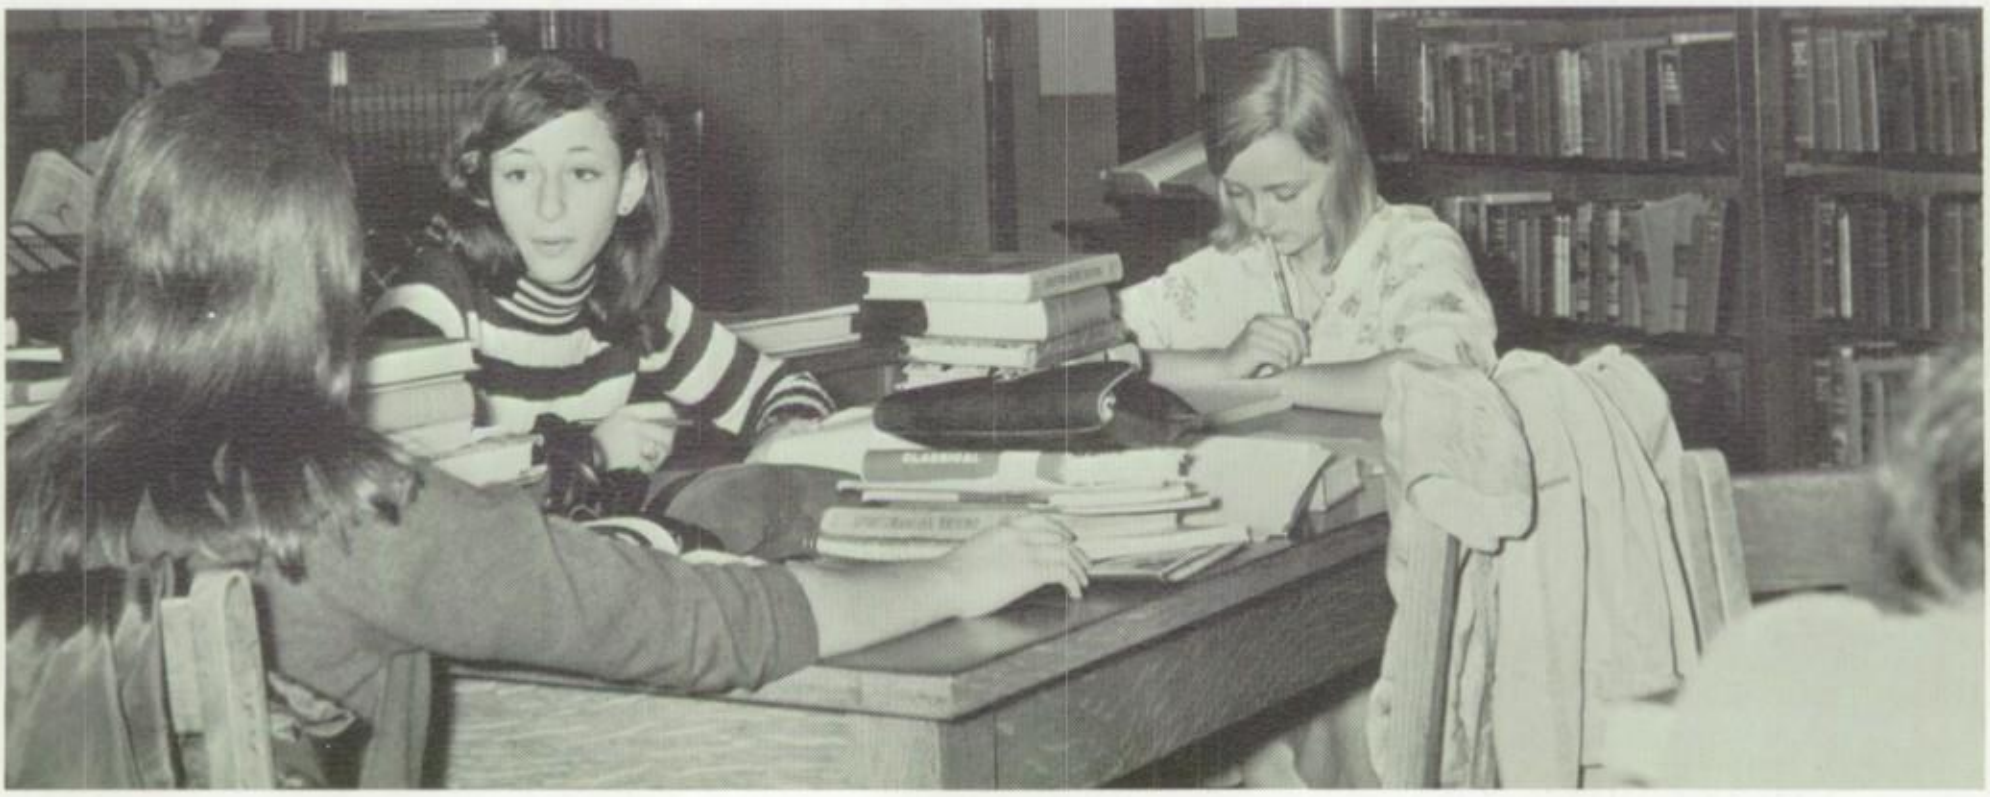


The building resounds as students pour into the corridors. Traffic squad members point out invisible lines that divide the corridors into two lanes of travel. The huge mass of people moves slowly in the overcrowded school. Students spend the time between classes comparing notes and finishing homework. Teachers mingle with students; happiness mingles with frustration for a brief five minutes. In the study hall intimate groups gather around an old chair to gossip. A last straggler rushes up the stairs to reach his destination on time. Then, as each one arrives at his next class, the uproar subsides.

CLASSICAL

Five more times during the day bells ring throughout the building, signalling the end of classes. Some students rush over to the old annex for music, art, or gym. An unexpected fire drill brings an orderly procession of students out of the school to encircle the new athletic field.

Although it is 2:33, school clocks say 2:30. The end of another day has come. Doors slam open and shut as students leave. Soon the ring of cars surrounding the yellow brick building disappears. By emptying waste baskets and sweeping floors of the deserted rooms, the custodial staff completes the pattern of daily school life.



Machines near the yellow brick building, digging up the site of the future school, fall silent. As their workers depart, the last janitor leaves for home. The lockers, the desks, the rooms stand in shadows; the building is empty.

Students, problems, and crises have come and gone, but each has made an intangible addition to the school's atmosphere. During the day, the people of Classical have made the school live. But now they have gone; it is night. The yellow brick building stands in darkness.

Behind the heavy, worn desk, a teacher leads a student into the search for knowledge and understanding. Near them, the door to Room 16R is still, having swung open noisily on loose hinges. Empty, one-armed chairs stand in rows opposite the desk. The wooden floor creaks, but those engrossed in the book hear nothing.

self-expression

Constant reading, classroom discussions, and writing assignments on a wide variety of subjects form the hard core of Classical's English course under the supervision of department head Miss Elizabeth J. MacDonald. In addition, students perfect their grammar and learn to give informative oral reports. So that no break in learning and constructive thinking will occur, a summer reading program is required of all grades.

With the arrival of Project Discovery, a new dimension has been added to the English Department curriculum. Now, students not only study literature, but also see four plays produced yearly by Trinity Square Playhouse. By experiencing great drama, students gain a deeper understanding of our world.

Designed for both research and leisure reading, the library occupies an important place in the intellectual life of Classical. Whatever information a student seeks, he will be helped to find it by Miss Marianna Spizzirri, Head Librarian, and by Miss Mary Rocha, Library Assistant. One of the most enriching opportunities at Classical is the intensive study of French and German. The Foreign Language Department, with Miss Charlotte A. Wetherell as chairman, has within its scope of instruction continual use of the language, both spoken and written, and literature assignments. Through weekly language lab attendance, students strive to understand the language in its present idiom and to develop a natural accent. Some innovations are a new text in French I and the attendance of advanced French students at Brown University. Since the second semester, these fifth year French classes have been large enough to be held at Classical. In adidtion to classwork, students acquire membership in the Junior Alliance Francaise and in the French and German Clubs, participate in national contests, and correspond with pupils overseas.

Cicero

For the Classical student of Latin and Greek, the notion of "dead" languages does not exist. After completing the required two years of Latin, students may continue in that course. There is also a three-year Greek program. These students not only probe the growth and decline of the Roman Empire and the glory that was Greece, but also read the works of ancient authors, including Vergil and Homer. At the same time, students find their English vocabulary greatly increased because many words in the English language are derived from Latin and Greek. The Greek Club, by presenting programs which have included lectures by native Greeks, adds interest and color to the ancient language courses.

To assist each student in realizing his potential is the aim of Classical's Guidance Department. Each student is counseled individually. An up-to-date record is kept of his academic achievement and extra-curricular activities, so that his counselor may advise the student in any situation, either academic or social.

In addition, the Department assists students in electing class officers and planning social events. The Guidance Department, headed by Miss Mary F. McKay, is open at all times to both students and parents who wish advice.

In an effort to give Classical students a sense of the past and an awareness of the present, the History Department directed by Mr. Paul F. Gleeson, offers a complete curriculum. Full year courses are required in Ancient and American History; interested students may take an additional course in European History.

Textbooks are supplemented by filmstrips, student research and lectures by guest speakers. A comprehensive series of maps has been acquired to aid in class work. Newspaper reading and discussion of current events, giving students an understanding of the complex modern world, add greater effectiveness to the history curriculum.

Because computers are becoming increasingly instrumental in directing our society, a fundamental knowledge of mathematics is essential. For this reason, a special two year mathematics program is being tried at Classical. Usually students are taught algebra one year and geometry the next. The four classes involved in the special program, however, have been taught this year the basic principles of both geometry and intermediate algebra while the more difficult topics of each will be taken up in the second year of the course. This program, department head Mr. Walter Bernard feels, will enable the student to gain a better understanding of both subjects.

An extensive workshop program introduces students to lettering, design, work with basic colors, story illustration, and modeling. Freedom of the individual to experiment and explore is the principle of workshop sessions. Movies, slides, magazines, books, and prints serve to acquaint students with the heritage of art. Visits to local areas displaying art provide students with additional learning experiences and stimulation. Students emerge from this curriculum skillful in artistic expression, appreciative of artistic beauty.

Full of expectation and fear, as apprehensive juniors we were introduced to the mysteries of a yearbook. Running head, gutter, white space, bleed—what did it all mean? Summer came, and with it a chance to rest and gather strength for the coming year. Soon we found ourselves in September; introduction, senior and undergraduate sections awaited us. We learned the value of homeroom periods, of the five minutes between classes, of Sunday afternoons. Successfully we met the first deadline. As our confidence grew, the thing we were creating began to take on a definite shape. Weeks raced by; the second and final deadlines became past events. Our creative masterpiece was finished, complete. Ads, inside cover, cropping, copy—what did it all mean? A yearbook.

After a brief encounter with abstract art, the customary Laureate tree once more adorns the magazine's cover. This year The Laureate has accepted more contributions from undergraduates as well as from seniors and has included a Latin translation and an original song with music.

This year, in spite of frustrated editors, confused photographers, and perpetually impending deadlines, the Review, guided by Miss Elizabeth McQuaid, again emerged triumphant. Among the honors it has received are the Boston University Scholastic Press Association Highest Honor award and the International Honor Award from the Quill and Scroll Society.

The Review not only has assumed a new front-page format with "floating" headlines, but also has increased the number of issues to seven a year. The result of a newsier front page, a more controversial editorial page, a funnier features page and a more informative sports page is that more Classicalites read the Review to keep informed of school news.

CLASSICAL'S ART DEPARTMENT, Mr. George King, shares trade secrets with Mr. Walter Feldman of Brown University.

Under the supervision of Mr. George King, Art Club members have worked independently to develop new skills in the visual arts. In addition to subjecting their masterpieces to criticism, they judged art works in nearby galleries and museums. This year, members also made Christmas tree ornaments for orphans and were thrilled by the works of Mr. Walter Feldman, Chairman of the Brown University Art Department.

Individual accomplishment is also emphasized in another organization based at the Annex: the unobtrusive, yet vibrant, Music Performers' Club, directed by Mr. John Mahan. Here, talented Classicalities come to sing and play, and interested students gather to hear their friends render compositions varying widely in period and style. One thing is certain: both performers and listeners leave each meeting a little more exuberant than usual.

Though small, the Greek Club, under the guidance of Dr. Elsie Leeman, is active. This year the club has entertained many guest speakers including Mr. Edward Grasso of Classical who spoke on Greek Epigraphy, the study of old inscriptions. Club members also attended the annual Greek play at Wellesley in April. Through the club, students have expanded their knowledge and understanding of Greek culture.

Twice every month, a select group of members of the Classical Debating Society, meets to discuss diverified topics following the formal rules of forensics. Although the club was formed unusually late this year, the members, many of them already experienced debaters, soon had both the organization and their arguments in good order. Under the direction of Mrs. Anne Kiberd, Classical entered the Forensic League's Southern District competition this winter, with Brad Metts and Joanne Gross representing the positive, and Paula McKeown and Jean McGrane for the negative. Arguing such topics as "Resolved: that American foreign aid should be restricted to non-military assistance," the debaters swept the tournament, winning all their matches. Since the team will lose none of its members this June, next year promises to be more successful than ever.

For students less inclined to formal debate, the Forum Club, also meeting fortnightly, is intended to provide students with an opportunity to express their opinions on current events. Under the leadership of Mr. Douglas Shaw, members have discussed the state welfare program and the significance of Republican gains in the last election, and have not been afraid to speak out on such controversial topics as academic freedom. In its capacity as an open forum for student expression, the Forum Club fills a vital need in the educational process.

One of the most successful new clubs at Classical this year has been the Future Teachers Club, whose adviser is Mrs. Lucia Mezzancello. The first meeting of the club attracted over two hundred Classicalities interested in the teaching profession. Among the activities this year have been the showing of several films, and the undertaking of field trips to other schools. In November, Mr. Frank Bucci, Dean of Admissions at Rhode Island College spoke, and in December, Dr. Mary Thorpe, distinguished Professor at Rhode Island College gave a talk entitled "To teach or not to teach."

Chess enthusiasts wage their intricate battles on Friday afternoons in the girls' cafeteria, as club advisor Miss Catherin Martin maintains order amidst shouts of victory and defeat. Two trophies were awarded this year to the Chess Club for its championship play in state tournaments.

At meetings, members have spoken on such topics as decibels, the human ear, and microphones. A recording session at Barrington College and a trip to H.H. Scott, a manufacturer of sound equipment, provided additional opportunities for members to use complicated equipment. Applying their knowledge, club members recorded the Christmas Concert and established a public address system in the study hall.

The newly-established Astronomy Club, under the direction of Mr. Kenneth Rahn, is devoted to the study and explanation of sky phenomena. During observation sessions, members learned the constellations, observed meteors, and looked for comets, planets, and moons. Among the speakers invited to talk to the club this year was Dr. Smiley of Brown University.

Directed by Mr. and Mrs. John Lafferty, the Science Club has brought members in contact with scientists and their work. Films and speakers from nearby institutions have acquainted students with many different scientific fields. New oceanographical techniques and methods used in combating water pollution have been some of the timely subjects discussed. Appreciating also the lighter side of science, members gleefully roasted shish kebab over Bunsen burners as part of their Christmas festivities.

In an effort to inject new life into its program, the Classical Hi-Y broke with tradition this year by opening its membership rolls to any girls interested in joining. Aside from holding several outings and other social activities, the group continued in the spirit of community service in which it was founded by showing five travelogues at Park View Junior High School, and by building a "Spook House" for the YMCA carnival. The proceeds from these activities were given to World Service.

Assisting the secretaries in clerical work and running from floor to floor and teacher to teacher, the messengers maintain vital intra-Classical communications. These dedicated girls give up study periods to perform this vital function. Satisfaction is their only reward.

Sacrificing their Tuesday morning zero period, the budget collectors dutifully take fifty cents each week from each student to pay for school activities and publications. They receive no other reward than having all their columns of figures balance.

As Classical's population grows, the corridors become more crowded, and the traffic squad works harder to maintain order in the five minutes between classes. At the end of each period, traffic squad volunteers make sure Up Stairways remain Up Stairways and create two-lane highways in the middle of Classical's narrow halls. As a reward for succeeding at these rigorous tasks, the members are allowed to leave classes a minute early and to arrive a minute late.

The athletic association, made up of student representatives from all of Classical's sports, helps the athletic director in regulating and financing school athletics. The association meets to award letters, and it works to acquire money for the athletic program. This year, when home basketball games failed to attract enough supporters to finance the operation of the games, the association organized Basketball Team Appreciation Night which was a great success.

FEARING THAT PATRICIA Fox will produce a penny instead of a dollar bill, Eleanor Collins nevertheless waits hopefully.

Della Rosa and Mushnick

Capping a series of victories in three major meets with a tie for first place in the Class B Championship Meet, Classical's outdoor track team had a successful season. Among highlights of the season's four meets were Dick Verri's record time in the 120 high hurdles and Sam Mushnik's continuous overpowering of opponents in the hammer throw. In addition to All Staters Ralph Della Rosa in the discus and Sam Mushnik in the hammer throw, Classical relied on such excellent performers as Jeff Parness in the shot, Jimmie Engram in the high-jump, Mike DelPrete in the half mile, Bob Feldman in the 440, Fred Basilico in the 880, George Lamson in the mile, and the amazing sophomore Dick Verri in the high hurdles.

The freshman team took first place easily in the State Junior Track Championship at Moses Brown and promises to give the varsity some outstanding performers this year. With the return of such dependable trackmen as George Lamson, Mike Ackroyd, Bob Feldman, Fred Silver, Greg Conway, Ralph Della Rosa, Dick Verri, and a powerful weight team, Coach Al Morro can expect another strong team next season.

Netmen defeat North Kingstown twice

Classical's tennis team, under the direction of coach Vincent J. Moses, battled past extremely difficult opposition to post a 2-8 record at the end of the 1966 season. The players struggled against severe handicaps; for lack of practice courts, the racketmen were forced to string nets in the old gym. Seriously lacking in experience, the team was built around a nucleus of only two returning seniors, co-captains Steve Logowitz and Larry Lieberman. In meet after disappointing meet, however, the netment showed that what they lacked in exprience, they compensated for with a seemingly indomitable spirit.

The high points of the season were the two meets against North Kingstown High School. In the first contest, Larry Lieberman and Ed Katz carried their singles matches with ease, and the teams of Lieberman-Radway and Logowitz-Katz won their doubles matches and the meet. The Purple netmen then disappointed North Kingtown's team in a return match, as Fred Radway, Jim Goshgarian, Murray Petrarca and Larry Lieberman turned in outstanding performances. This year's team will be strengthened by the return of seniors Fred Radway, Jim Goshgarian, Murray Petrarca, Larry Marks and Ed Katz. It was a rebuilding season for Coach Moses' racketmen, and if they gained nothing else, they acquired much valuable experience for this year's play.

IN THE TALL grass of the practice field, golf Captain Joe LaFauci demonstrates an accurate tee shot.

Paced by the excellent shooting of sophomore Captain Joe LaFauci, Classical's golf team gained its first winning season in many years by posting a 7 and 5 record. The team's victorious record, good for fourth place, was the result of a team effort. The consistent shooting of veteran Charlie DeAngelis, Ted Woodcome, and Rich Jerue and the promising development of newcomers Elliot Ratush and Steve Zuffoletti gave the linksmen several close matches. The purple started the season poorly, losing its first three matches.

After a resounding 43 point victory over Portsmouth, however, the team came into its own and proceeded to win six of its last eight matches. These six victories included triumphs over Hope and Rogers, teams which had defeated Classical earlier in the season. The most exciting match was Classical's second meeting with Barrington. Although the golfers had lost their previous match by 22 points, they returned to edge their opponents by one point. With Captain LaFauci and classmates Ratush and Zuffoletti returning this year, Coach John Sharkey can look forward to another successful season.

Inexperienced baseball team posts 6-8 record

Although last year's baseball team demonstrated its ability by defeating league champion Johnston 5-0, the season ended with a disappointing 6-8 record. After starting auspiciously with three consecutive victories, Classical failed to win for five straight games. Finally, the diamondmen recovered with victories over Scituate and Pawtucket Vocational, and with Bill Cox's three hit shut-out of Johnston. The team, however, was again set back, losing the re-play of a protested game with Bishop Hendriken and dropping two of the remaining three games.

The team boasted many outstanding individual achievements. Once again, senior Bill Cox turned in an outstanding year as a pitcher. Leading in the slugging department, sophomore Ken Ayrassian terrified league pitchers. The other half of the Classical battery, Bob Spicer, performed miracles at home plate. Frequently things looked bright when Don D'Antuono and Dennis Walsh fanned opposing batters with their super-charged fastballs. Although Coach Bellino has lost lettermen Paul Tracy, Bill Cox, Steve Baron, Bob Spicer, Dennis Walsh and Ted Fleming, he can rely on such returning lettermen as Ken Ayrassian, Dick Bicki, James Ramaeka, and Don D'Antuono.

Surrounded by the umpire and by Portsmouth players, Teddy Fleming brings home another run for Classical.

Although hampered this season by three close losses, Classical's football team managed to compile a 6-4 record. The team started auspiciously by shutting out Hope in the Injury Fund Game, 14-0 and, the next week, by overwhelming Johnston, 28-13 as Dick Bicki scored two touchdowns and gained 126 yards. Despite a drenching rain, the Purple defeated Pawtucket West, 20-6.

Then Classical lost two close games. Tied with Cumberland at halftime, 13-13, the Morromen finally managed to score with one minute left in the game, on a beautifully executed trick pass play. On its second play from scrimmage after the touchdown, however, Cumberland scored, added the extra point, and won, 20-19. The next week, another heart-breaking loss occurred. At the half, Classical led, 13-0, but Barrington came back to dominate play and to win, 20-13 in the last minute.

The Morromen recovered from these losses to defeat Cranston West, 25-7 and to trounce previously undefeated St. Raphael, 27-6. All the touchdowns in that victory came on passes by Alex Calenda, two to Dennis Walsh, and one each to Dick Bicki and Don D'Antuono. Then, Classical met the eventual league champions, Central. Though behind, 14-0, at halftime, Classical battled back to score a touchdown during the third quarter. Then, however, the tough Central defense intercepted three consecutive passes to go on to win, 33-13.

Seeming to be at their best in the rain, the Morromen came back from their defeat to shut out West Warwick on a mud-soaked field, 21-0. Highlights of the game were two blocked punts by Henry Santangini, and a 59-yard punt return by Steve Parrillo, made possible by a beautiful block by guard Mark Keller on a West Warwick defender. The Purple then traveled to Woonsocket for the last game of the season. Hampered by the freezing cold and strong winds, Classical's passing game never got started, and Woonsocket won, 21-13.

The monotony of the practice session held at Roger Williams Park, broken only by Mike Ackroyd's original exercise, paid off for the 1966 cross country team. Led by co-captains Fred Silver and George Lamson, the team had an excellent dual meet season, losing only twice in close contests with Cumberland and Saint Raphael. In spite of their early season record, Coach Ed Gauthier's harriers slipped toward the end of the season and gave an average performance in the various state meets. Classical finished second in the Columbus Day Road Race, seventh in the Bruckshaw Race of the Cross Country Carnival, third in the Class C Championship, and fourteenth in the State Championship. Besides seniors Lamson, Silver, Ackroyd, David Mills, Bobby Feldman, and Richard Bornstein, the team consisted of one junior, Peter Kennedy, and several promising sophomores, among them John Davey, Charlie Dunn, and Jim Skelly, who will be returning next year. As a sophomore, Dunn placed first for Classical in all but one of the big post season meets. He and Fred Silver were named to the Journal Bulletin All Class-C first team.

Although handicapped by the demolition of the old gymnasium this fall, and by a lack of speed and height, Classical's basketball team opened the season well with victories against Coventry, Cranston West, Johnston and North Providence, while playing their home games at Hope High. After suffering at the hands of three other teams, the Purple crushed Coventry once again by the amazing score of 71 to 57. The basketmen never recovered from this last burst of energy, however, and fell into decline for the duration of the season. The team's strength was concentrated in several outstanding players; ace shooter and rebounder Fred Silver led many Classical advances, supported by playmakers Fred Molak and Pete Kennedy, rebounder Steve Hickey and Richard "Bo" Bornstein, high-scoring Larry Gallo, and Don D'Antuono, a latecomer to the team. Next year, Coach Edward Gauthier will inherit an experienced set of players and can expect great improvement in the team's efforts.

Triumphant is the word which best describes Coach James McCaughey's indoor track team which was undefeated in dual meets, and which swept to an unexpectedly easy victory in the Class-B Championships. The tracksters easily overwhelmed O.L.P. and arch-rival Barrington and then scored a close victory over Class-A opponent East Providence. Track Team Appreciation Night was a great success, as the team trounced always dangerous Saint Raphael. The next week, Central, too, was defeated easily. Victorious in the Class-B meet, the tracksters went on to take a hard earned third place in the State Meet, trailing only Hope and La Salle, both in Class-A.

Supporting Classical's athletes are the cheerleaders who are talented in many way. Before the games, they sell football and basketball tickets, and during the contests, they induce spectators to cheer. Defying the laws of gravity, they suspend themselves in mid air. They scream above in the cafeterias during lunch period and, later, above the rumbling of an opposing team. Most important of all, the cheerleaders are happy in victory and understanding in defeat.

PATRICIA MULLANEY JOINS in the activities at gym class.

Because of last summer's demolition of Classical's gym, the physical education classes had to use other facilities. Because of a lack of space, juniors and seniors were excused from gym classes. This year, freshman and sophomore boys exercised in Annex A, and the girls first used their cafeteria, later moving across Stewart Street to a room in the All Saints Church Parish House. Although these facilities are barely adequate, they are only temporary arrangements until the new gym is completed.

This year the destruction of the gymnasium has also limited the number of girls' sports but has not dampened enthusiasm. Unfortunately, makeshift facilities for freshman and sophomore girls' gym classes are not large enough for the playing of competitive sports. Bowling and swimming, however, have continued to afford girls the benefits of athletic activity.

With each new event, the walls of the downstairs corridor change to advertise the coming discotheque or the next football game. Students passing between classes can be heard discussing the last dance and the latest victory.

AS A LAST Resort, the Missing Links play for a Classical dance.

FOR UPPERCLASSMEN, THERE now is a real room 8 to send freshmen to on the first day of school.

The school's interior appeared different this year. During the summer, workmen had transformed the boys' locker rooms into brightly-painted classrooms and had lined basement, first floor, and second floor corridors with lockers. Returning students were surprised to find their new homeroom assignments on lists hung in the corridors; hence, the outbreak of wall-gazers the first day of school. For years past, students had received new assignments from teachers. Keeping pace with the ever-increasing student body, the faculty had grown to seventy members, an addition of seven new instructors.

Sun flooded the athletic field when, on September 12, students, faculty and school department officials gathered. All looked on as ground for the future James L. Hanley Educational Complex was broken with a gilded shovel.

Upperclassmen rejoiced to find that, because the gym had been demolished, they would have one unexpected study period each day. A substitute gym was established for lower class boys in the Annex, and for freshman and sophomore girls in the All Saints Church across Stewart Street.

On September 30, Shane Jackson, of the Class of 1964, spoke to the American History classes about his experiences as a Marine in Viet Nam. Although he could not comment on matters of policy, Corporal Jackson answered students' questions and gave many seniors a fresh insight into the problems of that troubled nation.

Another visitor was Astronomy Professor Charles Smiley of Brown University. He addressed the Astronomy Club on the subject of natural explanations for the bewildering aerial phenomena classified as "U.F.O.'s", or unidentified flying objects.

Students discovered three new clubs: the Audio and Astronomy Clubs, both directed by Mr. Kenneth Rahn, and the Future Teachers of America, whose faculty advisor is Mrs. Lucia Mezzancello.

In accordance with the "Project Discovery" program, on October 4, students rode on buses to the Rhode Island School of Design Auditorium. There they saw George Bernard Shaw's Saint Joan presented by the Trinity Square Repertory Company.

On the weekend of October 13, Caduceus editors attended the Annual Columbia Scholastic Press Association Conference. After classes on layout, copy, and photography, the conference ended with a luncheon at the Americana Hotel.

The first dance of this year was "The Last Resort", so called because dancers and band had to resort to the girls' cafeteria. Sponsored by the 12A class, the dance featured "The Missing Links" and cokes in the boys' cafeteria.

On October 13, the cross country team returned from the Annual Columbus Day Road Race with a trophy signifying the city championship. Led by sophomore Charley Dunn, the Classical harriers placed second in the entire race.

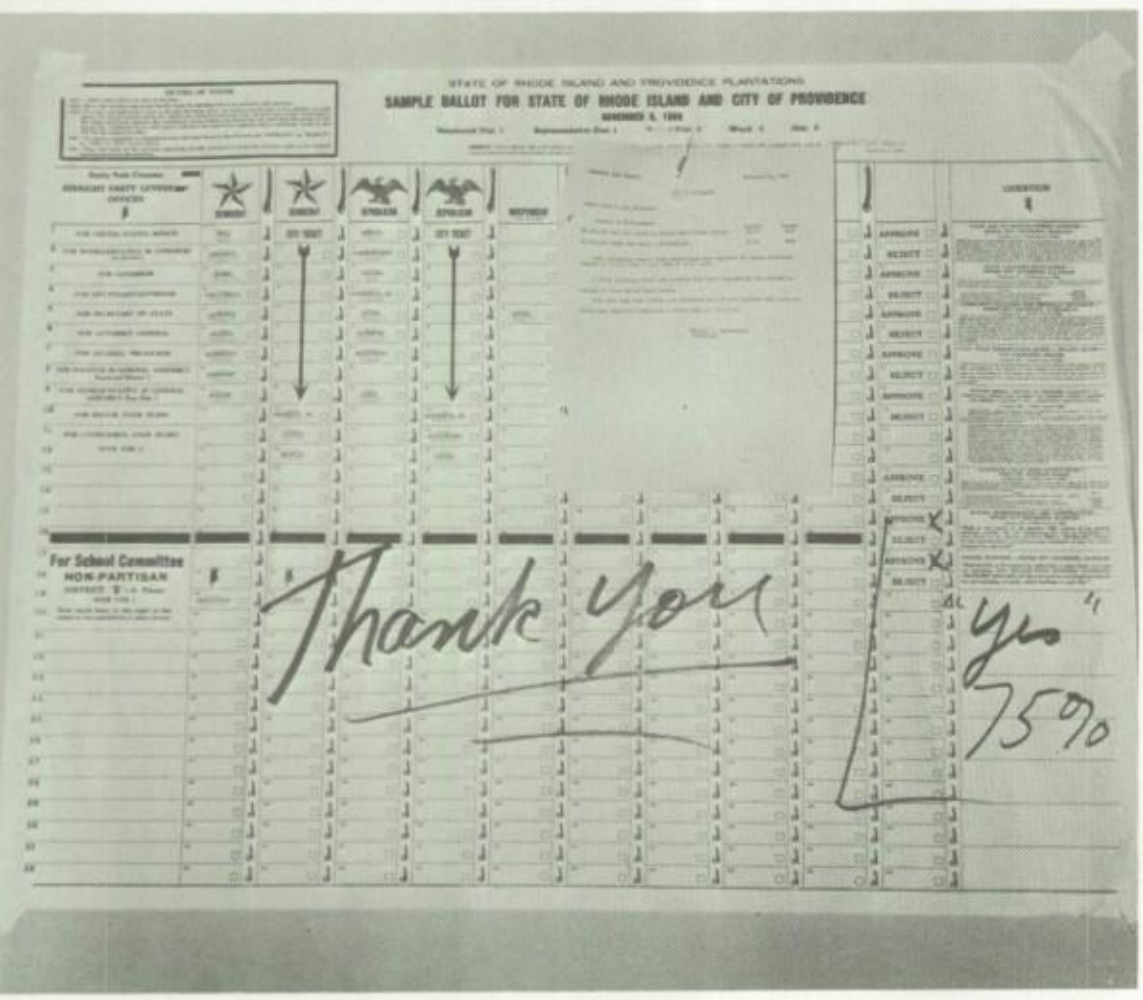
TRIUMPHANT RESULTS of the bond issue are posted in the first floor corridor.



To begin November, students rallied to support the bond issue. About one thousand Classical and Central students marched through downtown Providence to Kennedy Plaza where speeches were made in support of the issue. On November 8, the bond issue was approved by a four-to-one margin. To celebrate its passage, students attended "The Pumpkin Promenade", the 12B class dance.

Many clubs elected officers and invited guest speakers to address their members. Juniors, beginning to feel like upperclassmen, ordered their class rings and took PSAT's.

About forty students attended Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" sponsored by the Rhode Island Fine Arts Council.

PROFESSOR McLOUGHLIN SPEAKS to seniors on the Bill of Rights.

On the seventh of December, students once again boarded buses and rode to the Rhode Island School of Design Auditorium to attend a performance of Eugene O'Neill's Ah, Wilderness. Classicalites discussed the play in class and in the corridors for several days after, and the heat with which several points were debated proved that the students appreciated the impact of the performance, even if they did not all agree on its significance.

Seven outstanding seniors were initiated into Classical's chapter of the Cum Laude Society, and proudly sported their gold keys for days afterward. The senior classes later decided who of its members were truly superlative.

Speaking to an assembly of seniors, Dr. William McLoughlin, Professor of history at Brown University, stated that "liberty lies in the hearts of men and women." He spoke about the Bill of Rights and similar documents which preceded it.

Dr. Mary T. Thorpe, Distinguished Professor at Rhode Island College, spoke at the December meeting of the Future Teachers of America on the subjcet, "To Teach Or Not To Teach".

Held on December 16 at the Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel, the Ball was unusually well-attended. Because of the departure of English teacher Donald Leonard, prospects for the Ball's customary Santa Claus were grim. Joseph Winkleman, however, supplied the required jollity with great aplomb.

The Christmas Assembly was held the Wednesday before vacation under the guidance of Dr. Louis Pichierri, director of music. The Choir, Chamber Singers, and Orchestra performed "The Christmas Oratorio", Parts 1-3 by Johann Sebastian Bach. Narrator of the program was Stephen Kosacz; soloists were Nancy D'Antuono, alto, and Janice Mancini, soprano. Students and teachers were thrilled by the performance and also enjoyed the annual singing of Christmas Carols three days later.

Kiss and Tell about a triumph

After months of preparation and hard work by the actors, stage crew, business staff, and advisors, the senior play Kiss and Tell by F. Hugh Herbert was presented. Attracting a large and enthusiastic audience, the play was held on December 23 at the Hope High School Auditorium. The comedy, a great financial success, concerned a teenage girl and her parental troubles. With Mr. Norman D. Clark as adviser, and with Claudia Delmonaco and Jean Walter as co-directors, the play's cast was:

As his last official act, class president Paul Philips presented to Dr. Macdougald the class gift, a check to be used toward furnishing the new auditorium. Hardy Classicalites brave the snow Confusing was the only word for the week of February 6 because of the two snowstorms that occurred. Students spent Tuesday morning gazing at the thick snowflakes quickly swirling to the ground. After being excused at one o'clock they staggered home along with teachers and clerks. Heavy snow again greeted Rhode Islanders Friday morning; therefore, when the snow stopped and the sun shone in the late morning, students had a free day to themselves.

"Cardiac A Go-Go", a Valentine's discotheque, was the most unusual dance of the year. Although the location was that of most dances, the girls' cafeteria, it was changed radically to provide the proper mood. Painted newspaper covered with sheets of polyethylene and decorated with Op-Art designs were hung on walls with original Op-Art posters. A revolving glass ball in the center of the room gave the cafeteria an illusion of spinning around, and multicolored lights flashed on at intervals. Music was provided by tapes of popular dance albums.

Discolored, backless chairs and battered pipes encircle the groups who congregate in the girls' cafeteria before the start of school. As the students discuss homework or talk about problems, they rest their books on uneven, rough tables that are likely to snag a sweater. At first, undergraduates are bewildered by the cracking plaster of the walls, but gradually they become oblivious to their surroundings.

Freshmen

"All freshmen will report to the study hall for programming." That was a long time ago! Now you, the class of 1970, have survived one year at Classical carrying the heavy load of two study periods, ancient history, algebra, Latin, and English. Yellow bricks concealing up-down stairways and bellowing traffic commanders are no longer unique. This year you were at the bottom of the ladder, but you are now prepared to grapple with next year's freshmen.

Possibly by the time you graduate the new school will be built. Possibly . . . Until then, the boys will run over to the annex for gym and the windows will leak when it rains. We the class of 1967 wish you luck.

Sophomores

Due on Monday: a five hundred word theme analyzing the effects of power on the behavior of leaders as manifested in Caesar's Gallic Wars and Tennyson's Idylls of the King. Prove by geometric theorems that even the rule "every French rule has an exception" has an exception. When that's finished you can look forward to two more years of Classical, two years of deficiencies, hard work, and satisfaction.

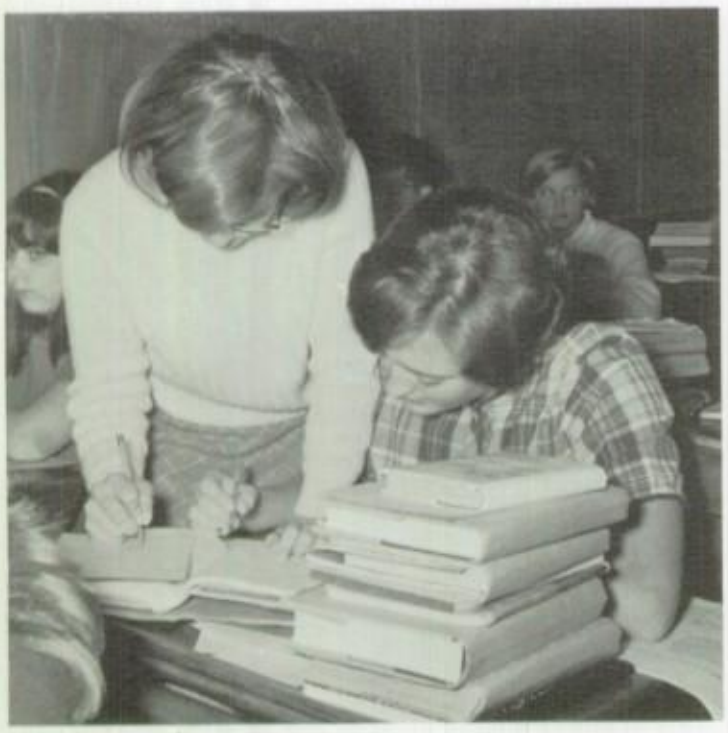
Juniors

Frantic juniors, faced by elections and electives, PSAT's and proms, Cicero and Cyrano, try to endure their last confusing year before seniority. They take infinite tests to determine the amount of knowledge they have accumulated, invent numbers for lab reports, cheer teams to victory and enter the frenzied rush for college admission.



"IF I HAD known it would be an open book test, I would have brought my own book," Mary Lavendier informs Mary Lisi.

Graduates

Classical students pass four long, hard years in preparation for college; therefore, the guidance room on the first floor of the yellow brick building is a natural habitat for seniors. One wall of this room is a bulletin board on which are posted current college announcements and invitations. The guidance room, with its four counselors, bulletin board, and rows of college catalogues, is the first step for the aspiring college student of Classical.

OFFICERS OF THE Class of January 1967: Seated: Paula Paccasassi, Social Committee; Paul Phillips, President; Eileen Falcone, Vice-President; Thomas LaFauci, Social Committee. Standing: Carol Hinchcliffe, Social Committee; Nancy Husband, Secretary; Walter Kosacz, Treasurer; Marek Keller, Social Committee.

Timid freshman! Fearfully, you reported to the study hall and heard the fateful words " 'A' through 'M' report to room 13-R; the rest to room 13." And you wondered just where all those rooms on your program card were. By the time you were sure where you were going, more problems followed in quick succession: daily tests, declining "Agricola," uncovering Tutankhamen, understanding "tongue-in-cheek." You tried to keep a record, but somehow those spelling slips always disappeared.

Confident sophomore! And why not have confidence? After all, you had survived a grueling year. But it wasn't quite so easy to cope with two foreign languages as you had thought. "Forget your troubles," they said, "try a pilgrimage to the beach." And you did, and despite the cold and wind you had fun. And then, you had to make a decision: physics followed by C.B.A. or chemistry followed by biology; forsake Caesar for Napoleon, or the language lab for Cicero, or . . .

Worried junior! Even if you had chosen the right electives, and even if that beautiful class ring did fit perfectly, you had to face one standardized test after another. And how many times do you remember hearing the immortal words, "Darken the space completely, and erase all stray marks?" To escape, you fled to the beach again, but this time, food, drink, and, best of all, warmth. And although you now had to manage everything from trigonometry to Addison and Steele, from chemical reactions to sight translations, there was that long-awaited unassigned night to save you. But, all was not bleak; there was a gown, a tuxedo, and after that, baked Alaska.

Self-assured senior! After all, Room 3 and Miss Slocum always mean seniority. You decided to "Come and Find Out," and you liked what you saw. Vainly you tried to trade a bus #4 for a bus #9, but the pleasure of Goddard Park made up for it. And then, another gown, another tuxedo, and this time, afterwards, Barrington. October came, and in between catalogues, interviews, and applications, you asked hopefully, "What's the cut-off point this year?" There was a place for 'The Last Resort," and The Christmas Ball was memorable. Somewhat apprehensively you overcame the final "Finals," and then you counted the days until ". . . tutor of our youth," the last winter.

Cum Laude Society

January 1967

STEPHEN R. PREBLUD
Summa Cum Laude

Since the founding of the Classical chapter forty-five years ago, initiation into the Cum Laude Society has been the highest honor a student can attain. Proud of their chapter, the only one in a Rhode Island public high school, the officers of Classical's society, Dr. William T. Macdougald, the president; Miss Charlotte A. Wetherell, the secretary; and Mr. Walter H. Andersen, the treasurer, uphold the standards of the society by electing for membership only those students of good character who have maintained an average of 90 or better throughout their high school years. By reaching this summit of scholastic achievement, these students have shown that they understand the society's motto, the words of Louis Pasteur. "Will, Work, Success."

OFFICERS OF THE Class of June 1967: Sandra Melikian, Secretary; Stephen Parrillo, Social Committee Chairman; Nina Garganese, Social Committee Chairman. Standing: Murray Petrarca, Vice-President; Charles Redihan, Treasurer; Edward Katz, President.

The first of four long years.
Freshmen, young and hopeful in the study hall
Filled out forms and gazed in wonder
At the battered plaster.
We studied to survive: O. Henry, algebra,
The culture and the language of Rome.
In class we were told,
"The President is dead."
This year the Beatles rose
And the bus drivers struck.
A hard year, but we returned
To struggle with Victorian literature
And devise safe ways to carry compasses
As the clamor of falling bricks distracted us.
The year of the Championship Team,
The Johnson landslide, the Mad Turkey
And the importance of Earnest.

A good year, followed by the bleakest year of all.
As Juniors we struggled against the Big Tests
Studied the evil and ambitious Macbeth
Fumbled with slide rules, and disappointed,
Started gym again. Relaxed by Stratford
And the Prom, we endured to cheer
With Bastille-day joy the fall of the gym
Which heralded our year as Seniors.
Project Discovery and the bond rally,
Groundbreaking and the senior play,
Virgil and Homer, Shakespeare and Milton,
College applications occupied our time.
With the senior prom, graduation,
A final dinner, sad but happy
The four years end.

Sixty-three years ago, the Class of 1904 produced the first CADUCEUS as a memento for Classicalites and a messenger to the world outside. To find a suitable name for their book they turned to Classical Mythology. "Caduceus" was the name of the staff borne by Mercury, messenger of the immortal gods. With it, Virgil says, "the god gave sleep and took it away, flew through the sky and performed other remarkable feats."

Thank You . . .

One can never appreciate the enormity of creating a yearbook until one has been an integral part of its production. The editor-in-chief, because he is at the center of all this activity, can understand that a yearbook is not produced by one, two, or three people, but by hundreds of people, without whose contributions, large or small, a yearbook could never be produced. Therefore, thank you very much . . .

Mr. Walter Andersen, for guidance, patience, and for having things done before I knew they had to be done;

Miss Alice B. Dwyer, for guiding the efforts of the copy staff;

Mr. Jack Brown, for your constant personal assistance;

Mr. George Avakian, Mr. Ralph Millspaugh, and the entire Loring's staff, for your professional service;

Mr. Arthur Keefe, Jr., of S. K. Smith and Co., for your help with the cover;

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer M. Blistein, for an office, food, and for quietly tolerating a morose editor and an overworked staff;

Bill Shumaker, Assistant Editor, for maintaining general sanity by remaining calm at all times;

Laura Laufer, Copy Editor, for quietly dedicated work, and for managing the copy staff;

Karen Goodman, Layout Editor, and Linda Weiler, Assistant Layout Editor, for maintaining sense and proportion in the layouts;

Clint Clemens, Photography Editor, for following instructions to the letter, and for consistently excellent pictures;

My three loyal and dedicated apprentices, Susan Finger, Lisa Bob, and David Andrews, for doing any kind of work at any time;

Miss Marguerite Vigliani, Editor-in-chief of the 1966 Caduceus, for excellent instruction last year and for moral support this year;

Linda D'Aleno, for the sketch of the school on the cover;

Eileen Minkin, for the art work on the end papers;

Advertising staff, for financing the yearbook;

Mrs. Shirley Nelson for typing anything anytime;

Mr. Paul Bachand, for taking care of the yearbook's complicated finances;

Mr. George King, for your help and suggestions with the artwork.

Faculty and student body, for supporting the yearbook.

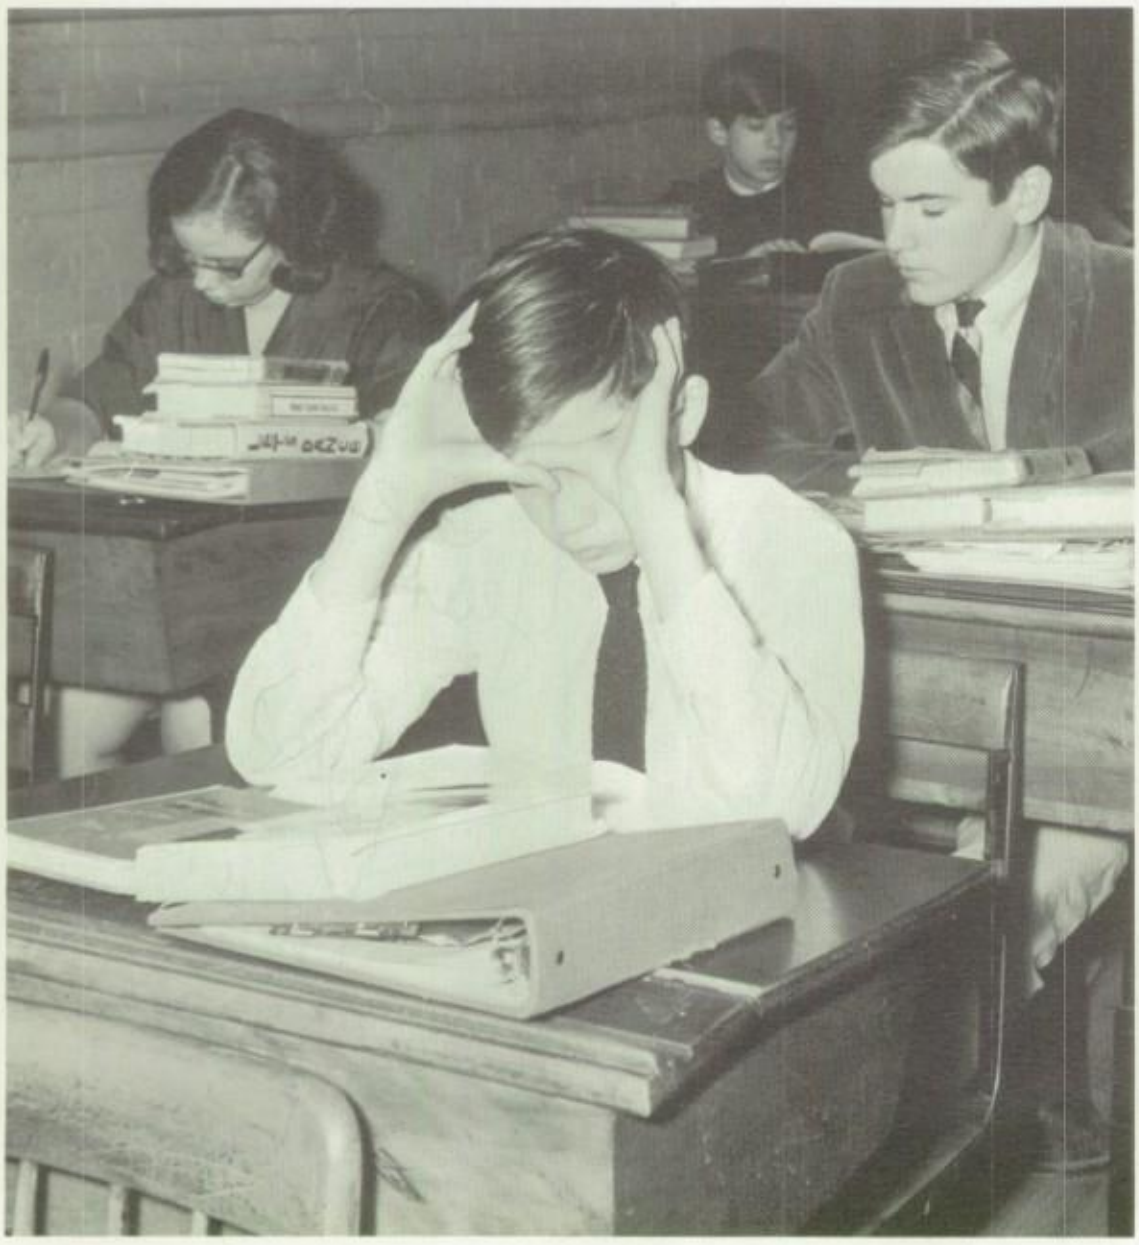
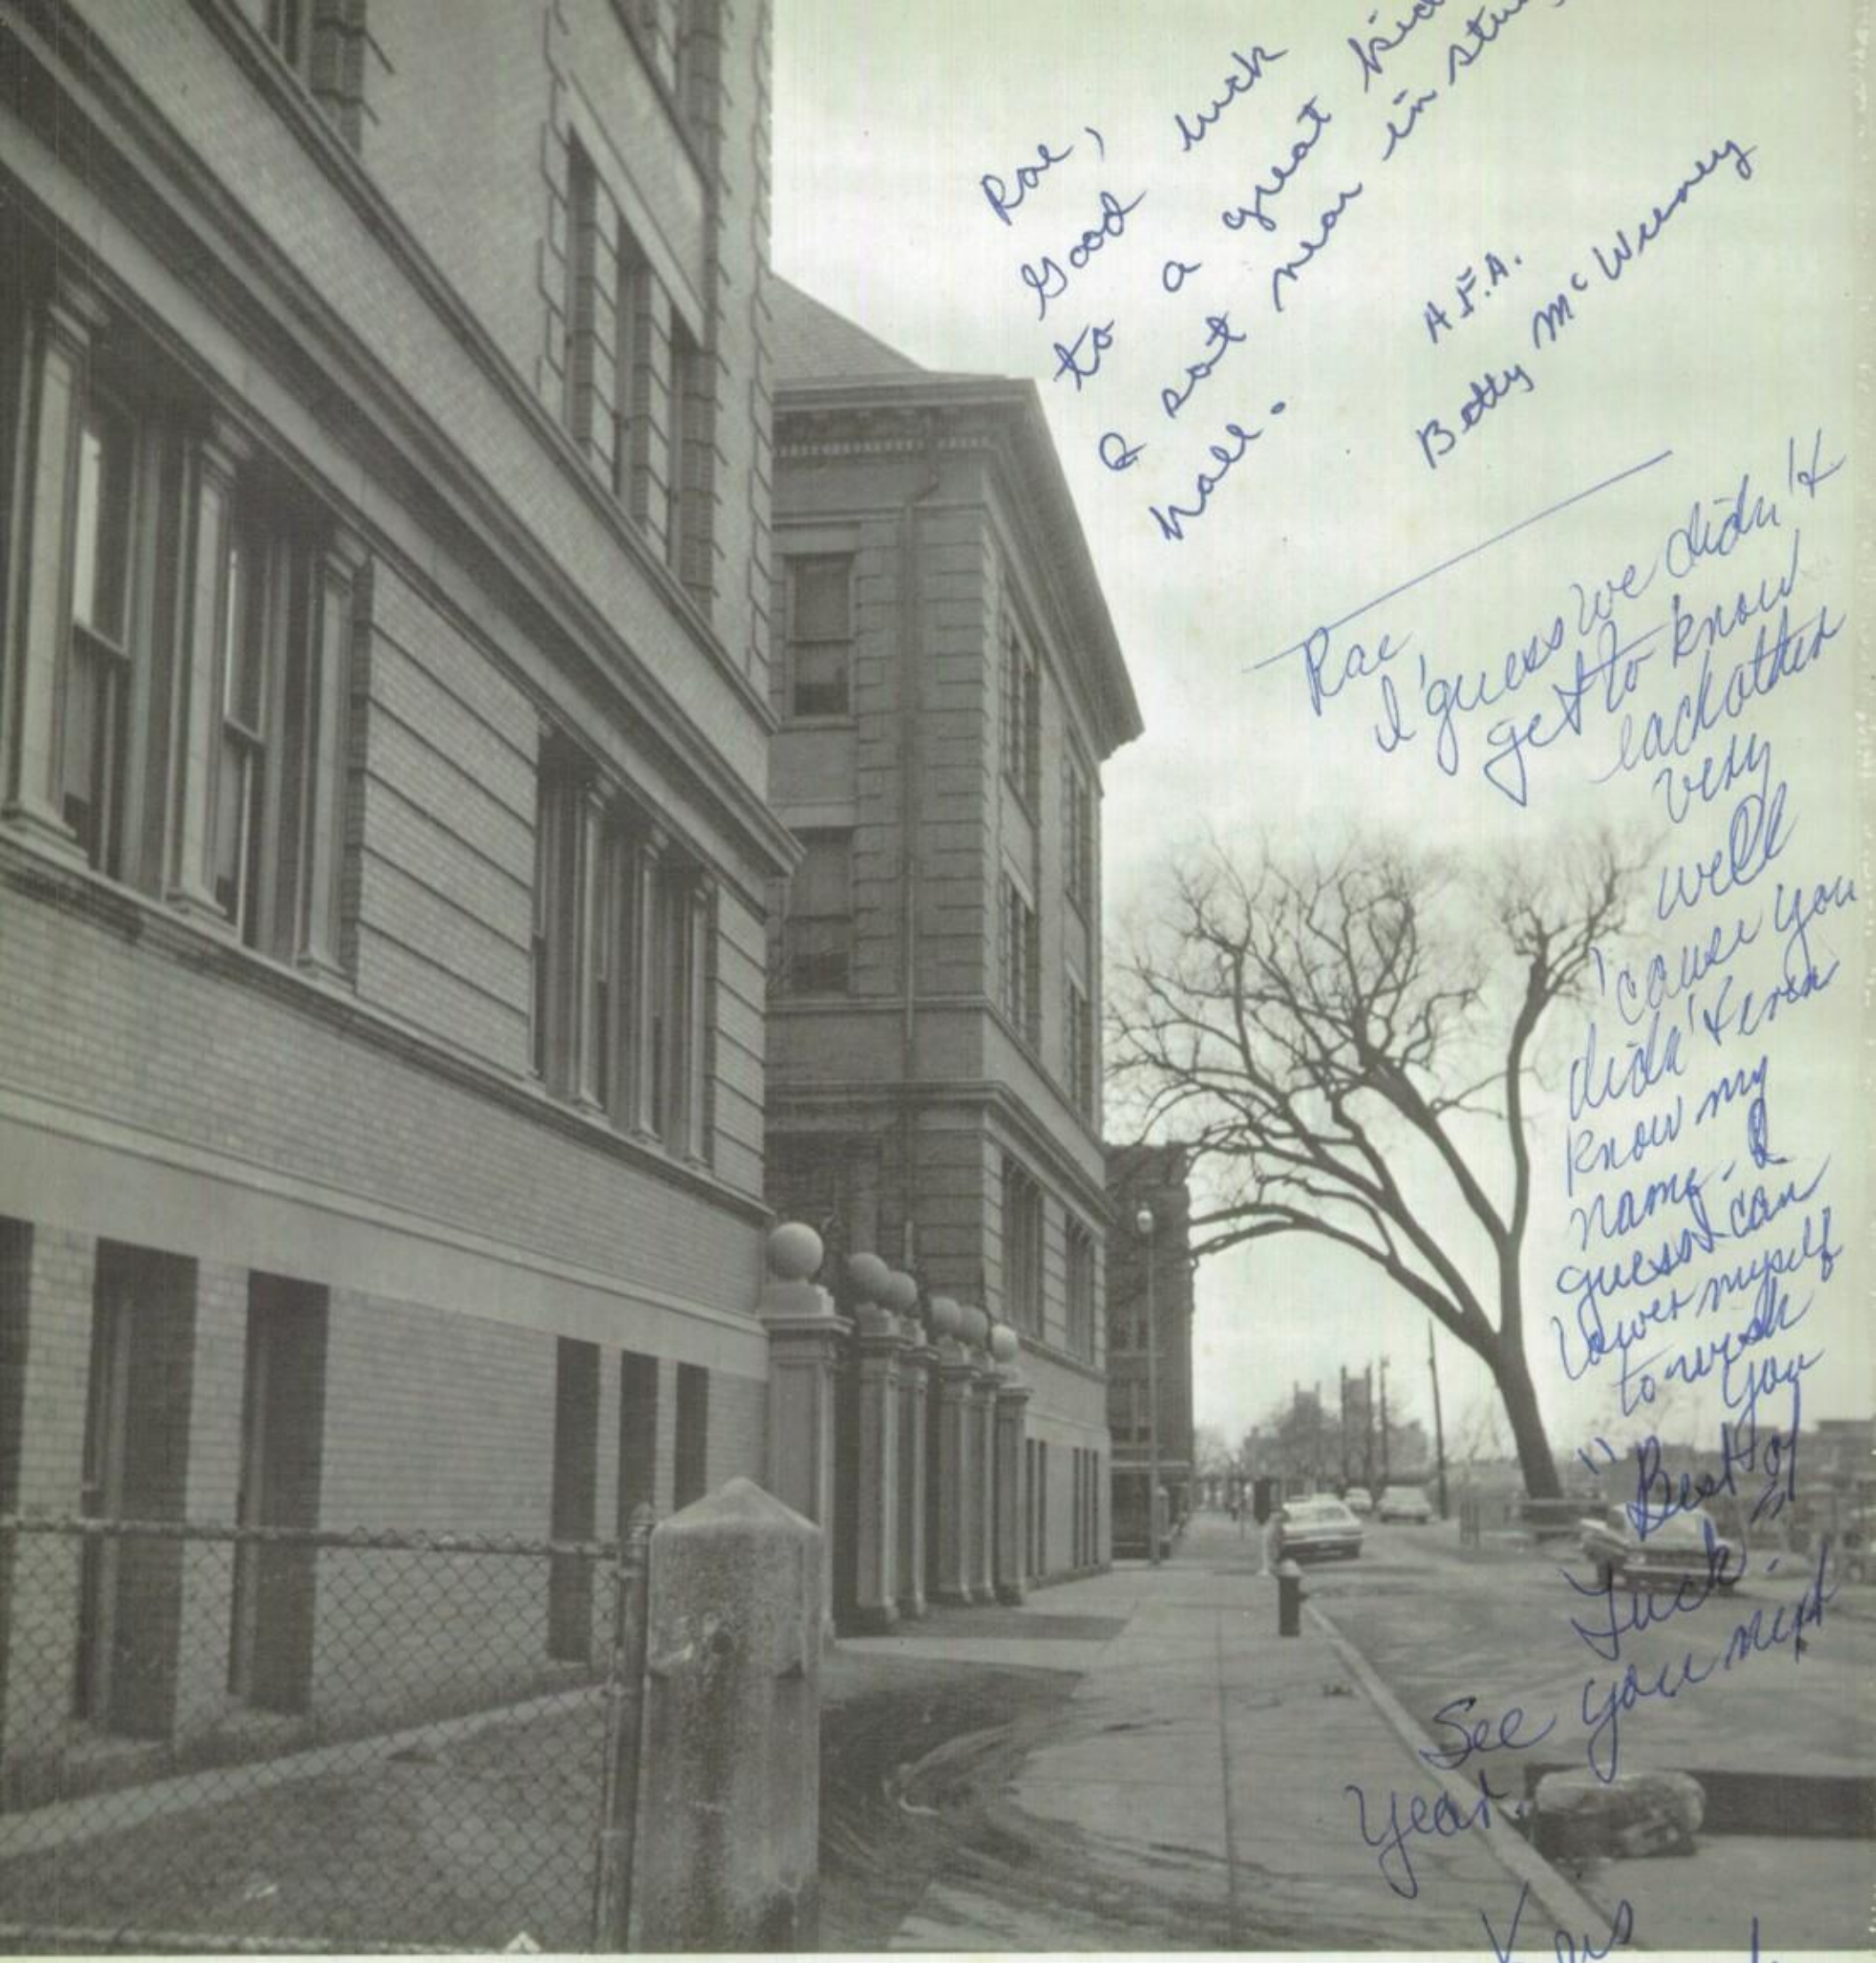
EPILOGUE





In five years, the experiences of high school may be only a collection of vague memories. In five years, if the Central-Classical Project proceeds on schedule, the old building, too, will be only a memory. Soon, it will be torn down, and in its place, there will be a new gymnasium and a larger athletic field. The people who learned and taught in the building will go elsewhere. Classical High School will move across the street where plaster will not crack, and where melting snow will not drip into room 16. Classical High School will still exist, but it will never be exactly the same as it was in the yellow building on Pond Street.
